

Communicative Power

vol. 1 no. 4

The focus of this volume is on the interplay between power in mass communications and economics, education, law and/or politics. Authors may find in the following questions some useful points of inquiry.

1. How are media and power used to sustain or challenge the political economy?
2. To what extent do media assume ideological roles in mapping out and defining social realities?
3. How does power interact with meaning, communication and discourse phenomena?
4. How are human rights, basic freedoms, equality, or justice affected by communicative power?
5. To what extent do public relations campaigns or practices affect the allocation of resources, the development of law, or the negotiation of power?
6. How is communicative power used to alter social awareness of the public space or the struggle for democracy?
